Materials - Plastic

Selecting the correct type of tape is crucial to ensure the safe and secure transport of your products and can help maintain the sustainability profile of your business. Polypropylene Tape and Paper Tape are the most common types of tape used in packaging, with numerous additional options available that provide optimal performance for specific applications.

Polypropylene

Mainly used in industrial settings that require heavy-duty packaging, polypropylene tape is made from synthetic material, often making it sturdier and more durable than paper tape. The use of plastic also means the tape is resistant to tearing, moisture and abrasion, making it suitable for use in harsh environments. Polypropylene Tape is also available in a range of thicknesses and has a synthetic adhesive that is intended to stick to various surfaces, including plastic, metal and cardboard.

All the plastic tapes that are in the Bespoke Plastic Tape range use 30% recycled content and are Plastic Tax Compliant.

Materials - Paper

At Allpack, we focus on providing you with more sustainable options, it's something as a company we feel very passionate about. Innovating sustainability and creating products that can easily be recycled via curbside is part of our long-term company-wide objectives.

Our Bespoke Printed Paper Tape range has specifically been sourced from supply chain partners who can provide best-in-class paper tapes that are environmentally friendly, compared to plastic tapes and can be applied using existing hand tape dispensers.

Kraft Paper

Paper Tape, also known as Kraft Paper tape is a paper-based option that's biodegradable and environmentally friendly. It can be easily torn by hand and is commonly used for sealing cartons and packages. The tape can remain adhered to boxes after use, making waste management processes far simpler and is a great alternative in reducing our reliance on virgin plastic tapes.

Adhesive Types

Selecting the correct adhesive type is becoming increasingly important as the demand for sustainable options increases. Each adhesive type has different properties and can affect what type you will need for not only the products you are shipping out, but also the environment in which the taped goods will be exposed.
